I. Read the following text.

The white horse

A Cree chief had a very beautiful daughter who was proposed to by many brave warriors. There were two men who led the rivalry for her hand, a Cree chief from Lake Winnipegosis and a Sioux chief from Devil's Lake. The girl herself favoured the Cree warrior, and when he brought a beautiful white horse as a gift for her father, the man agreed to the marriage.

The Sioux chief was enraged by the rejection of his proposal. On the day of the wedding, he gathered a War Party and came across the plains towards the home of the beautiful girl. The Cree chief tossed his lovely bride on top of the white horse and leapt upon his own grey one. The couple fled to the west with the rejected Sioux and his War Party on their heels.

The Cree chief doubled back several times and the couple hid among the bushes. For a time, it seemed as if they had lost the Sioux. But once they were on the plains again, the beautiful white horse was visible for miles, and the War Party soon found them. A rain of arrows fell upon the fleeing lovers, and the warrior and his bride fell dead from their horses. At once, the Sioux captured the grey horse, but the white one evaded them. One man claimed he saw the spirit of the young bride enter into the horse just before it fled from them.

The white horse roamed the prairies for many years following the death of the Cree warrior and his lovely bride. People feared to approach the horse, since the spirit of the girl lived within it. Long after its physical body passed away, the soul of the white horse continued to gallop across the plains, and the land where it roamed became known as the White Horse Plain. They say that the soul of the white horse continues to haunt the prairie to this very day.
